Quarterly Fund Manager Review

Heading into the quarter, the global deflation trade gathered momentum, with bonds selling off and equity markets reaching historical highs. On 26 January, 10- and 30-year gilt yields hit the second highest mark since the Brexit vote (1.53% and 2.16% respectively). However, yields retraced their gains post-26 January as investors began to question the timing and scale of fiscal stimulus in the US. The UK 10-year bond yield finished the quarter 10bps lower to close out at 1.14%, while the 30-year fell 9bps from 1.81% to 1.73%. The UK economy, although mixed, continues to surprise to the upside, with the International Monetary Fund and Bank of England (BoE) revising up their respective growth forecasts for the UK in 2017. Consumers' urge to spend has proven resilient post-Brexit, with retail sales picking up again in February after declining in January. According to the Office for National Statistics, February's sales volumes were up 1.4% compared with January and by 3.7% versus February 2016. In February, consumer price inflation exceeded the BoE's target for the first time since late 2013, rising to 2.3% versus expectations of 2.1% and up sharply from January's 1.8%. These inflationary pressures are forcing shoppers to spend more on essentials according to the British Retail Consortium, which reported signs of weakening demand for more expensive items. Broad measures of consumer confidence remain solid, however. The inflationary headwinds were also evident in February's purchasing manufacturers' index (PMI). Although all three sectors - services, industry and construction - remain in growth mode, there has been a slowing in momentum. This slowdown is particularly evident within services, which saw activity slow to a 5-month low. Despite the rise in inflation, the BoE kept its benchmark rate unchanged at 0.25% over the quarter. Although the central bank, in its inflation report released in February, revised down its inflation expectation for the UK, the monetary policy committee appears to be getting restive, with one member voting for a rate increase and others remarking it will not take much more news about rising inflation or growth for them to follow suit.
